Arizona State Land Department Unveils New Website

PHOENIX – The Arizona State Land Department has unveiled its new website. The Department website may be found at <http://www.land.az.state.us> The new site has improved interactive features, increased lines of communication with Arizonans and is meant to be more easily navigated.

“The Department continues to move forward in its efforts to both inform the public about permissible activities on State Trust lands and market exceptional real estate opportunities that benefit the Trust,” noted State Land Commissioner Maria Baier, “our new website components include a state mapping application and other interactive features.”

The Department also has launched a Facebook page and Twitter feed. This allows social media users to become educated with regard to the Department and its initiatives. “Social media enables the Department to reach a wider audience and better communicate about projects, real estate opportunities, auctions and land closures,” Commissioner Baier said.

Interested persons can receive Department tweets at <http://twitter.com/azstateland>. Both sites may be accessed from the Arizona State Land Department website.

The Arizona State Land Department manages 9.3 million acres of State land held in trust for 13 beneficiaries, primarily k-12 education.
